HAMPTON INSTITUTE
School For Indian and Colored Youth
Trained Booker T. Washington, founder of Tuskegee, and his successor, Robert R. Moton.
For nearly fifty years Hampton has been sending into the South and West bands of well-trained, Christian leaders to help colored and Indian people live richer and better lives.
Nearly nine thousand graduates and former students, who have felt the influence of Samuel Chapman Armstrong and Hollis Burke Fessell, have been spreading the Hampton idea of education for service.
This army of leaders has literally transformed the lives of thousands and has brought to hundreds of communities—rural and urban alike—more friendly race relations.
Hampton Institute is an industrial village with 1400 students, 200 teachers and workers, 140 buildings and an instruction farm of 600 acres. Whatever work the Hampton School needs to have done, the students are usually prepared to do.
Farming, home-making, teaching, and the common industries are vital parts of the training of Hampton Institute boys and girls.
Blacksmithing, bricklaying and plastering, carpentry, cabinetmaking, machine work, painting, printing, shoemaking, stonemasonry and plumbing, tailoring, tin-smithing, upholstery and wheelwrighting—these trades are offered to ambitious and earnest Negro and Indian boys.
Eighty courses of thorough training in cooking, sewing, laundry work, gardening and methods of teaching.

School For Indian and Colored Youth
Trained Booker T. Washington, founder of Tuskegee, and his successor, Robert R. Moton.
For nearly fifty years Hampton has been sending into the South and West bands of well-trained, Christian leaders to help colored and Indian people live richer and better lives.
Nearly nine thousand graduates and former students, who have felt the influence of Samuel Chapman Armstrong and Hollis Burke Fessell, have been spreading the Hampton idea of education for service.
This army of leaders has literally transformed the lives of thousands and has brought to hundreds of communities—rural and urban alike—more friendly race relations.
Hampton Institute is an industrial village with 1400 students, 200 teachers and workers, 140 buildings and an instruction farm of 600 acres. Whatever work the Hampton School needs to have done, the students are usually prepared to do.
Farming, home-making, teaching, and the common industries are vital parts of the training of Hampton Institute boys and girls.
Blacksmithing, bricklaying and plastering, carpentry, cabinetmaking, machine work, painting, printing, shoemaking, stonemasonry and plumbing, tailoring, tin-smithing, upholstery and wheelwrighting—these trades are offered to ambitious and earnest Negro and Indian boys.
Eighty courses of thorough training in cooking, sewing, laundry work, gardening and methods of teaching.
